The great theoretical weakness of "Exposed" is therefore the failure of its catalogue to illuminate the nature of the link it posits between voyeurism and surveillance--and yet the exhibition does hang together as evidence that these are both manifestations of the human predilection to know more than we are supposed to know. Still, though the exhibition includes video and DVD projections, its ...

Hunter returns from Experia with devastating news: the invasion led by King Maximilian of Drymairad has devastated the country and left the majority of Expermians homeless and destitute. Xena suggests a fundraiser to rebuild the country, an idea Hunter accepts with exhilaration. But an offhanded remark sends Xena's world into a whirlwind of emotions--a comment which will lead her to a decision that will change their lives forever. Marred by his hostile actions toward Experia and Traes, King Maximilian needs to appease the International Community. "Why not show you've changed by merging our annual Engtnight Declaration with the Expermian fundraiser the Isle de Losierres is hosting?" Celeste advises, but with one warning: "No matter what happens, Engtnight is mine." But Max discovers the Isle hides a secret--the mythical Silver Fox--and Max is determined to retrieve it. Pleasing his wife while simultaneously uncovering the Silver Fox's location will require some tricky maneuvering--especially since J.R. Dunsworth is still on the loose ...

"Captured in three Tokyo parks in the early seventies, Kohji Yoshiyuki's The Park series features some intriguing photographic works of art. Shot at night using flash and infrared film, the photographs show hetero- and homosexuals gathering for furtive sexual encounters in the Shinjuku, Yoyogi, and Aoyama parks. These amorous scenes, however, are unpleasantly crowded; even before Yoshiyuki approached them with his camera, the couples had become objects of desire for voyeurs. The sixty-two photographs are presented here in duotone quality with an interview with the artist. --BOOK JACKET.

How can art and visual theory contribute to the understanding of our current surveillance society? Watched! presents a selection of European artists who relate to current issues of discipline, control and security in our contemporary surveillance society. Surveillance is an expanding part of daily life. Since the start of the new millennium, we have seen major developments in security policies, data collection, software for private use, biometric science, social media, smartphones and technological innovations in other areas of smart surveillance?. Parallel to this change that has taken place in all parts of society, critical responses have increased across a wide range of disciplines, one of them being the arts. This publication offers a selection of artistic works and practices that addresses and reflects on issues of surveillance over the past fifteen years.

For Merry Alpern, whose previous book Dirty Windows (Scala, 1995) received international recognition, her new project was a natural outgrowth of her own daily life: spending time in stores, mostly women's clothing stores. She noticed other women in these stores in the middle of the day, all day, everyday. In particular, the group dressing rooms seemed to offer a combination of camaraderie and anonymity. Trying on clothes is an opportunity for self-examination, fantasy, and opinions from others – sometimes solicited, sometimes not. Alpern says: "We stand there in our underwear, all trying to achieve some private version of a look." With a video camera concealed in her purse, Alpern took endless hours of footage, without ever looking through a viewfinder, but putting the bag in a general direction of activity. Sometimes the bag was an extension of her body as she carried it; with her, other times it was placed in a stationary position, separate from her body. Later Alpern started to examine the footage, to isolate moments and make stills. "Viewing surprises on the video-tape was one of the most entertaining parts of the project." With this new photographic essay, Alpern dives into the realm of the objects that cover our social body. Her colorful images constitute a visual ethnography of American shopping, indeed one of the most important activities of everyday life in the West. Shopping is a sometimes shocking and often funny expedition into a world we all know only too well!

What is the function of art in the era of digital globalization? How can one think of art institutions in an age defined by planetary civil war, growing inequality, and proprietary digital technology? The boundaries of such institutions have grown fuzzy. They extend from a region where the audience is pumped for tweets to a future of " neurocurating, " in which paintings surveil their audience via facial recognition and eye tracking to assess their popularity and to scan for suspicious activity. In Duty Free Art, filmmaker and writer Hito Steyerl wonders how we can appreciate, or even make art, in the present age. What can we do when arms manufacturers sponsor museums, and some of the world 's most valuable artworks are used as currency in a global futures market detached from productive work? Can we distinguish between information, fake news, and the digital white noise that bombards our everyday lives? Exploring subjects as diverse as video games, WikiLeaks files, the proliferation of freports, and political actions, she exposes the paradoxes within globalization, political economies, visual culture, and the status of art production.

From 24-hour-a-day "girl cam" sites on the World Wide Web to trash-talk television shows like "Jerry Springer" and reality television programs like "Cops," we've become a world of voyeurs. We like to watch others as their intimate moments, private facts, secrets, and dirty laundry are revealed. Voyeur Nation traces the evolution and forces driving what the author calls the 'voyeurism value.' Calvert argues that although spectatorship and sensationalism are far from new phenomena, today a confluence of factors-legal, social, political, and technological-pushes voyeurism to the forefront of our image-based world. The First Amendment increasingly is called on to safeguard our right, via new technologies and recording devices, to peer into the innermost details of others' lives without fear of legal repercussion. But Calvert argues that the voyeurism value contradicts the value of discourse in democracy and First Amendment theory, since voyeurism by its very nature involves merely watching without interacting or participating. It privileges watching and viewing media images over participating and interacting in democracy.
